1 Sticky price measures

We examine the frequency of price changes for 570 categories of goods and services covering about 66.4% of consumer spending based on "Dixon and Tian items frequency data". Then, I looked up the monthly CPI index and weights data for these 570 items based on their ID one by one for the years 2005 to 2021. This is used to construct CORE inflation measures of sticky and flexible CPI.

Dixon and Tian items frequency data provides the frequency (expressed as a %) of prices changing per month for 570 items that were contained in the VML data set for the whole period January 1996 to December 2007. Column A is the COICOP item name. The frequency is in Column B. The rebase weight in column C are made to add up to 1000 (their total share in CPI is 664). Let $\lambda =$ the monthly frequency of price changes. Mo = the mean duration between price changes implied by $[=-1/\ln(1-\lambda)]$. If prices can change at any moment, not just at the monthly interval, the instantaneous probability of a price change is $-\ln(1-\lambda)$ and the mean time between price changes $-1/\ln(1-\lambda)$ months. We used this formula to calculate the Mo. column from the Freq. column in Table 1. If prices instead change at most once per month, then the mean duration is simply $1/\lambda$, about half a month longer. In Table 1 we list, for each of the 570 categories, the 1996-2007 average monthly frequency of price changes. Table 1 also provides the weight and the mean duration between price changes. The monthly frequency of price changes averages 21.9%. The weighted median is 17.9%. For the median category the time between price change averages 5 months. Thus, for items comprising one half of consumption, prices change less frequently than every 5 months.

Using this information, we break down the monthly CPI's published components into "sticky price" and "flexible price" aggregates. If price changes for a particular CPI component occur less often, on average, than every 5 months, we called that component a "sticky-price" good. Goods that change prices more frequently than this we labeled "flexible price" goods.

Next, I looked up the monthly CPI index and weight for sticky price items based on their ID one by one for the years 2005 to 2021.

Mo = the mean duration between price changes implied by $\lambda = -1/\ln(1-\lambda)$].

Weight = Share of the Level Item in the VML data set for the whole period January 1996 to December 2007 (these sum to 1000).

Freq = the estimated average monthly frequency of price changes (λ in the text).

2 Criteria for evaluation: forecasting future inflation

This work uses Cogley's model to test the forecasting ability of core inflation rate, and it also compares the forecasting ability of various core inflation measures, including Excluding food and energy and Trimmed mean Cogley's model is based on Bryan and Cecchetti's definition of core inflation: "Core inflation is changes in the price level that are expected to persist over a long period of time."

According to Bryan and Cecchetti's definition, a valid core inflation is one that is "pure" after removing temporary factors from measured real inflation. On this basis, Cogley developed the following model to evaluate the predictive power of core inflation:

Here, x represents the headline inflation rate and core x represents some core inflation indicator, both year-on-year data. Parameter h is N (month) ahead. For sufficiently large H, the core deviation, $(\pi_t - \pi_t^c)$, should be inversely related to subsequent changes in inflation, $\pi_{t+h} - \pi_t$. Moreover, in order for the candidate to satisfy equation (1), the coefficients in the regression, should satisfy $\alpha = 0$ and $\beta = -1$.

Of importance to the forecasting model is the estimated coefficient of β , which indicates whether core inflation has sufficiently purified the transitory component. Because if the absolute value of the estimated coefficient is equal to 1, it indicates that the model is a random walk process, and the components removed from the core inflation do not contain any information that predicts future overall inflation. If $\beta = -1$, the forecasting capacity for core inflation is the best. This proves that core inflation has fully captured the trend components of overall inflation and has a complete forecasting ability for future inflation.

- 1. If the $|\beta| < 1$, it indicates that subsequent changes in inflation are overestimated;
- 2. If the $|\beta| > 1$, it shows that underestimation of the current temporary movement in headline inflation.

Therefore, the closer the absolute value of the estimated regression coefficient β is to 1, the better the predictive power of core inflation is. In addition, the root mean square error RMSE = $\sqrt{\frac{1}{T}\sum_{t=1}^{T}(\pi_t - \hat{\pi}_t)^2}$ obtained by Cogley regression represents the deviation between the predicted value and the actual value. $\hat{\pi}_t$ is the forecast value of the inflation rate. The smaller the RMSE, the more accurate the forecast, and the better the forecast of core inflation.

3 Results

From the above discussion, I used my own data to re-simulate the values of the parameters. The results please see Table 2, figure 1.

4 Conclusions

As expected, all Cogley regressions of the core inflation rate with β estimates are all negative. The beta keeps falling as the number of forecast periods rises; The forecast RMSE for core inflation rates increases as the number of forecast periods increases continuously. This suggests that the longer the forecast period, the more inaccurate the forecast. It can be seen that the forecast ability of Excluding Food and Energy is not good as Trimmed Mean. Excluding Food and Energy coefficient estimates of the Cogley regression deviate the furthest from - 1 within 10 months forecast horizon and the root mean squared error (RMSE) of the predictions is the largest in all prediction periods. The interesting point is that when forecast horizon exceeds 10 months, the coefficient estimates of the Trimmed mean deviate from -1 becoming further away than EX F&E.
