1 Sticky price measures

We examine the frequency of price changes for 570 categories of goods and services covering about 66.4% of consumer spending based on "Dixon and Tian items frequency data". Then, I looked up the monthly CPI index and weights data for these 570 items based on their ID one by one for the years 2005 to 2021. This is used to construct CORE inflation measures of sticky and flexible CPI.

Dixon and Tian items frequency data provides the frequency (expressed as a %) of prices changing per month for 570 items that were contained in the VML data set for the whole period January 1996 to December 2007. In table 1, Column A is the COICOP item name. The frequency is in Column B. The rebase weight in column C are made to add up to 1000 (their total share in CPI is 664). Let $\lambda =$ the monthly frequency of price changes. Mo = the mean duration between price changes implied by $[=-1/\ln(1-\lambda)]$. If prices can change at any moment, not just at the monthly interval, the instantaneous probability of a price change is $-\ln(1-\lambda)$ and the mean time between price changes $-1/\ln(1-\lambda)$ months. We used this formula to calculate the Mo. column from the Freq. column in Table 1. If prices instead change at most once per month, then the mean duration is simply $1/\lambda$, about half a month longer.

In Table 1 we list, for each of the 570 categories, the 1996-2007 average monthly frequency of price changes. Table 1 also provides the weight and the mean duration between price changes. The monthly frequency of price changes averages 21.9%. The weighted median is 17.9%. For the median category the time between price change averages 5 months. Thus, for items comprising one half of consumption, prices change less frequently than every 5 months.

Using this information, we break down the monthly CPI's published components into "sticky price" and "flexible price" aggregates. If price changes for a particular CPI component occur less often, on average, than every 5 months, we called that component a "sticky-price" good. Goods that change prices more frequently than this we labeled "flexible price" goods.

Next, I looked up the monthly CPI index and weight for sticky price items based on their ID one by one for the years 2005 to 2021. Since the monthly CPI data is calculated year-on-year, the CPI trend starts from February 2006.

2 Stochastic models for forecasting inflation rate

Beside the core inflation measures, we also includes stochastic model in our comparison. The main purpose of modeling time series using stochastic processes is to explain how the phenomenon evolves and to make predictions based on the estimated model. The main idea of this method is to predict the future through inflation historical data, which is used as the baseline in comparison.

2.1 Autoregressive process (AR)

A stationary series, Y_t , follows a process AR(p) if the condition if fullfilled:

where $\varepsilon_{\rm t} \sim N\left(0,\sigma_{\varepsilon}^2\right)$ stationary time series, $E\left(\varepsilon_{\rm t}\right)=0, E\left(\varepsilon_{\rm t}^2\right)=\sigma^2, E\left(\varepsilon_{\rm t},\varepsilon_{\rm s}\right)=0, \text{if } t\neq s; \beta_0,\beta_1,..,\beta_p$ parameters.

The autoregressive models are characterized by the fact that the value of variable Y at time t depends on the previous values of the variable.

One of AR models used to explain the unpredictability nature of financial asset price evolution is Random Walk model, where $p = 1, \beta_0 = 0, \beta_1 = 1$.

The representation of the model is $Y_t = Y_{t-1} + \varepsilon_t$.

As a result, the value of a series in a given period depends on the value of the series in the previous period and a random term whose value is expected to be zero.

2.2 Data used

The data used are represented by the monthly data series from January 2005 to December 2019 for the inflation rate in UK.

2.3 The analysis of the series stationarity

Hypothesis: H_0 : the time series has a unit root H_1 : the time series is stationary

According to Augmented Dickey-Fuller test, for a significance apron of 0.05, the test's value is -2.6532 and P-value is 0.3013. Since the p-value is not less than .05, we fail to reject the null hypothesis. This means the time series is non-stationary. In other words, it has some time-dependent structure and does not have constant variance over time. However, after applying on the series a logarithmic transformation to remove the negative effect induced by non-stationarity in variance, test statistic is -3.5831 and P-value is 0.03473. As the test value is lower than the critical value for any level of relevance, we can say that at 5% level of relevance, the null hypothesis is rejected or it is stationary, so the basis series is integrated by the first order. After this transformation, we will get a series with approximately the same trend but with milder amplitudes of the variance.

2.4 Identification of the model's type

Using the data series with a monthly frequency of the inflation rate for the period January 2005 - December 2019 there were estimated AR model to describe the inflation rate.

The Akaike Information Criterion is used to choose the order of the autoregressive model. The results recommended an AR process (8).

2.5 Parameters estimation of the econometric models

The estimated model is:

3 Criteria for evaluation: forecasting future inflation

This work uses Cogley's model to test the forecasting ability of core inflation rate, and it also compares the forecasting ability of various core inflation measures, including excluding food and energy(FE), sticky price(SP) and trimmed mean(TR). We also include the ability of current inflation to predict future inflation as a baseline in comparison(AR(8)). Cogley's model is based on Bryan and Cecchetti's definition of core inflation: "Core inflation is changes in the price level that are expected to persist over a long period of time."

According to Bryan and Cecchetti's definition, a valid core inflation is one that is "pure" after removing temporary factors from measured real inflation. On this basis, Cogley developed the following model to evaluate the predictive power of core inflation:

Here, π represents the headline inflation rate and core π^c represents some core inflation indicator, both year-on-year data. Parameter h is N (month) ahead. For sufficiently large h, the core deviation, $(\pi_t - \pi_t^c)$, should be inversely related to subsequent changes in inflation, $\pi_{t+h} - \pi_t$. Moreover, in order for the candidate to satisfy equation (1), the coefficients in the regression, should satisfy $\alpha = 0$ and $\beta = -1$.

Of importance to the forecasting model is the estimated coefficient of β , which indicates whether core inflation has sufficiently purified the transitory component. Because if the absolute value of the estimated coefficient is equal to 1, it indicates that the model is a random walk process, and the components removed from the core inflation do not contain any information that predicts future overall inflation. If $\beta = -1$, the forecasting capacity for core inflation is the best. This proves that core inflation has fully captured the trend components of overall inflation and has a complete forecasting ability for future inflation.

- 1. If the $|\beta| < 1$, it indicates that subsequent changes in inflation are overestimated;
- 2. If the $|\beta| > 1$, it shows that underestimation of the current temporary movement in headline inflation.

Therefore, the closer the absolute value of the estimated regression coefficient β is to 1, the better the predictive power of core inflation is. In addition, the root mean square error RMSE = $\sqrt{\frac{1}{T}\sum_{t=1}^{T}\left(\pi_{t}-\hat{\pi}_{t}\right)^{2}}$ obtained by Cogley regression represents the deviation between the predicted value and the actual value. $\hat{\pi}_{t}$ is the forecast value of the inflation rate. The smaller the RMSE, the more accurate the forecast. and the better the forecast of core inflation.

4 Results

From the above discussion, I used my own data to re-simulate the values of the parameters. The results please see Table 2,3 and Figure 2.

5 Conclusions

As expected, all Cogley regressions of the core inflation rate with β estimates are all negative. The beta keeps falling as the number of forecast periods rises; The forecast RMSE for core inflation rates increases as the number of forecast periods increases continuously. This suggests that the longer the forecast period, the more inaccurate the forecast.

Figure 2 shows that the predictive power of the core inflation of AR(8) is the worst. The coefficient estimates of the Cogley regression deviate the furthest from - 1 and the predicted root mean square error (RMSE) was the largest except 1 month head. The Cogley regression β estimate of the core inflation rate of Trimmed Mean is closet to 1 when the forecast period is less than 10 months. The β of the Ex FE and SP are between Trimmed mean and AR(8) in this period. So from β estimates, TR has the best prediction effect of core inflation rate when forecast horizon less 10 months. The FE core inflation rate is predicted to work best after 10 months periods.

From the root mean square error criteria, for months 1 the ranking is SP>TR>AR(8)>FE; month 2 is SP>TR>FE>AR(8); month 3 SP>FE>TR>AR(8); months 4-12 FE>SP>TR>AR(8). All four similar.
